Description: Arizona is home to 22 federally recognized Tribes with nearly a quarter of the land considered Indian Country. Due to Congress and the Supreme Court, jurisdiction as well as criminal justice looks different in Indian Country. Despite the federal government’s limitations, Tribes today continue to shape their justice systems in alignment with both cultural values and protecting their communities. The Law Journal of Social Justice (LJSJ) Symposium is proud to welcome practitioners within the area of both Federal Indian Law and Tribal Law.
